In spite of a slovenly style probably contracted in the teaching of duffers' in the gymnasium, Cusack in the opinion of many local experts ought to have been awarded the prize, but could hold the people back. The journey the umpires (Messrs E. Robinson and G Mollison) were unable to agree as to the winner, and the referce (Dr Barnes, of the N. P. steamer Victoria) gare the result as a draw. In announcing his decision, he said that although one man had drawn blood that amounted to nothing. had a slight superiority in the leads, that was set off by good countering. Both men were on their feet and able to fight for their lives, and in his opinion honours were easy. As we have said, local expert opinion was in favour of Cusack. He put in some heavy, straight blows; he was stronger on his legs and hit straighter than his opponent, but at the same time be indulged, like Northcott, too much in swinging blows which did not always land where they were intended. It was a most point with the audience whether Cusack allowed his opponent to get away so frequently out of mere generosity or on account of sheer inability to follow up his advantages, but it is probably fair to assume that he let his man go out of generosity born of gymnssium teaching. The little man apparently appreciated this. Cusack's bozing was cer. More anon. tainly better than on the last occasion, and he scored two points to his opponent's one in the majority of the rounds. Northcott showed wonderful activity, and power of accepting punishment, and considering that he was at least one and a half stones lighter than his opponent he deserves to be complimented on the very plucky manner in which he stood up to him. Cusack evidently respected him, and in some of the rounds there was far too much sparring and not enough of fighting. Northcott used his left better than Cusack, on the whole hitting very straight, but he was not up to his previous form, being trained to a nicety on the last occasion. fouls occurred, although appeals were made. Both men, is the Referes said, 'knew the game;' they were very fair, and boxed right through viciousness or ill-temper. As this was not a fight to the finish, but a boxing contest, it would have been more in accordance had been arrived at, and if it possible to tell who was the best man at the end of twenty rounds, the referse should have ordered another round to enable him to arrive at a satisfactory decision. San Francisco, and, indeed, the whole Pacific Coast, has gone wild. couple of weeks ago the steamer Portland arrived in Puget Sound, from the Klondyke, bringing sixty miners each possessed of a fortune, their pile amounting in the aggregate to a ton of gold dust that had been washed out of what is without doubt the richest placer mining field in the world. 	STATESMAN.
	THE LATE COURT MUTSU. One by one the prominent actors in the Ato of otto are brainfaction appare in any 1	great political drama enacted in this country during the last forty years are passing off the stage. Only a few weeks ago the nation mourned the death of Count Goto, a statesman whose name will always be prominently associated with the passing of
-	Japan from a state of feudalism and insignificance in the affairs of the world into an Empire which aspires to rank with the countries of the West, not only in respect of military and naval strength, but also in industrial and commercial enterprise, and in the highest arts of civilisation. Count Goto's death has been soon followed by that of Count Mutsu, the larger part of whose life has been given up to similar service in the interests of his country. His early days were not passed on a bed of roses. When he was nine years of age his father, a prominent samurai
-	of the Wakayama clan, who had been holding the position of chancellor of the Clan's ,	exchequer, was for some reason cast into prison, and his family, according to the old formula, was declared to be extinet. Young Mutsu then wandered about the country with his mother, . '	experiencing all the hardships of a ronin life. Reaching Yedo at the age of fifteen, he began to study Chinese, i,	and four years later, when his father was •	released from prison, he returned to Wa- kayama to see him. He did not, however, remain there long. Returning to Yedo he became interested in the agitation for the expulsion of the 'barbarians' (the term then used to describe foreigners), and the restoration of the Emperor to power. This led to his forming an acquaintance with the late Marquis Kido of Choshu, Count Itagaki of Tosa, and others who afterwards came into prominence. In 1863 he left Yedo for Kyoto, where he met another Tosa man, Sakamoto Ryoma, who conceived a great admiration for Mutau's talents, and the two resolved to work together in the interests of their country. In pursuance of this resolve, Mutsu came to Kobe, and entered a naval school which was established in the district by the present Count Katsu, who was then the Naval Minister (in the Bakufu Government), the president
•	of the school being Mutsukinew friend, Sakamoto. It was while here that young •	Mutsu severed himself from the agitation for the expulsion of 'barbarians,' on the ground apparently that it was certain to be fruitless.
٠.	Between 1865 and 1867 the two friends went to Satsuma, and there for the first time Mutsu met Ito. This visit resulted in an accession of students to the naval school, and Goto Shojiro becoming interested, a sort of navy was organised, and called the Kainentai, under the protection of the Tosa Clan. A few years later, when the Restoration was accomplished, some of the ٠	ships comprising the Tosa fleet were contributed (as we stated in giving a resume of Count Goto's career) to form the nucleus of an Imperial Navy; while the others went to form the nucleus of the great mer- cantile fleet new owned by the Nippon !	Yusen Kaisha. Mutsu developed into a į	leader of the Restoration movement and his services were retained in the Wireign assistance, and had conceived a plan to overthrow the Government. But as the rebel forous lost strength while on a second tour to Europe and America. Shortly after his return he was appointed Minister to Washington, and later he joined the Cabinet as Minister for Agriculture and Commerce, but did not hold the office long. He joined Marquis Ito's Cabinet as Foreign Minister, and undertook the responsible task of negotiating the revision of the Treaties with the Powers. The Revised Treaties, it must be admitted, afford strong confirmation of the popular estimate of the late Count's ability and legal acumen. For accomplishing the revision of the Treaty with Great Britain he was created a Viscount. It was during his tenure of the Foreign Office that the war was fought with China, and his services in this connection led to his elevation to the rank of Count. The retrocession of the Liaotung Peninsula, however, made him and his chief the most unpopular men in Japan, but now that the excitement has cooled down, and Japan has had some experience in Formosa of the difficulties of colonisation, the popular judgment of the statesman who saved Japan from a serious and disastrous conflict is not so bitter. Looking back over the career of the late Count, is will be freely acknowledged that in him the nation has lost a statesman whom it can ill afford to spare.—Kobe Chronicle.

nection with safes. One maker, when a or, on takne evening young man, remembers being called anded him into an office where a safe robbery had ved. It so been committed. The safe door was ue book on open, and the question was: How had uch he was the robbery been done? 'One of letter and three things must have happened, said etter to his the safe-maker. Either the cashier has cheque for used his keys; or he has been careless, on the en- and allowed somebody else to use them; e note was or, what is very much more probable than who gave it either, he forgot to lock his safe up served the last night. This last alternative turneque which ed out to be right, and the incident ece to have resulted in an invention preventing the noble self- key from being taken out unless the safe ement of a locked their safes when they have not. ence looked When that occurs, perturbation ensues. cted in the The safe-owner puts in his key, tries to turn it, but fails. He immediately thinks mistake after a visit from the safe-maker. An instance of this happened in the case of a gentleman who went away to Switzerland on a six weeks' holiday, leaving his servants in charge of the house, and, as he thought, his valuable collection of plate and jewellery securely locked up in his safe. On returning, he could not unlock the safe, and immediately concluded that the lock had been tampered with. He sent his butler in a cab to fetch a locksmith, and was himself meanwhile very greatly agitated. The locksmith found that the safe was unlocked—in fact, it had not been locked at all during the six weeks; and any time in that period anyone, by simply turning the handle, could have opened the door and acquired a fortune. Everything, however, was just as the owner had left it. Another trifling source fof great anxiety is illustrated by an incident that happened last January on night. This kind of mishap often happens. -Cassell's Family Magazine for August.
